Interim Management and Support

NHS IMAS: Getting with the programme

NHS IMAS offers organisations that need short or medium term support, the means to access the management expertise that exists throughout the NHS. We are here to encourage and facilitate the NHS to use the skills that are already available within the organisation.

During this period of transition, organisations need the expertise and capacity to transform themselves through effective leadership and strategic control. Programme management is key to retaining full control of the directional change during the transition.

NHS IMAS can provide expert Programme Managers who will support your organisation in creating a defined programme management environment. We understand that setting up a programme can require a considerable amount of time, resource and funding. Using NHS IMAS talent pool members to carry out the work means that costs are reduced from the outset, if compared with the costs of using a private sector consultant.

The foundations of a successful programme are always built on a controlled project environment. Not only can NHS IMAS provide you with expert and enthusiastic Programme Managers, we can give your organisation access to effective tools and techniques for project management.

To discuss your programme or project requirements or to talk about our project management tools and techniques, please call the NHS IMAS core team on (0113) 254 6464/6424. You can also contact us at nhs.imas@nhs.net.
